IN THREE VOLUMES Vol. I.

SAN FRANCISCO 1897.

To Col. Daniel M. Burns,

First Secretary of State under the present Constitution, I beg leave, while he is far away in "Our Sister Republic," to inscribe this first volume of a history of the great city of which he is a distinguished citizen.

THE AUTHOR.

INTRODUCTORY

In the years close to the middle of the century, when, being connected with the press, I began to watch the current of events in the local world, the habit was formed of preserving notes of all that claimed the eye, as an aid in miscellaneous writing. These, which inevitably became more and more manifold and engaging, were a faithful guide and stay through a long and active period, and they have been supplemented to date. They are now arranged, it is believed, in the most convenient form for reference, that of the alphabet, and are published as deserving perpetuity and possessing universal interest.

Boone withdrew, and "photo engraving" was added to the business in 1879. Both the firm and business were divided in 1880, when there became two firms of the name of Dewey & Co., one composed of Alfred T. Dewey and Warren B. Ewer, the other of Alfred T. Dewey, Warren B. Ewer, and Geo. H. Strong; the first named continued the publication of the papers already mentioned and also began the publication of the Pacific States Watchman, a weekly, devoted to fraternal orders; they also continued the engraving business; the other firm held to patent agencies; the publishing firm took the style of the Dewey Publishing Co., in 1892, with Alfred Holman as manager, succeeded by Mr. Halloran the next year.
- Dewey, Squire P.; pioneer of July 5, 1849; acquired large wealth in real estate; returned to N. Y., his native State, in 1885; contributed $250 to the Starr King Monument in June, 1888; contributed $500 to the Bush Relief Fund for laborers, March 3, 1880; died in N. Y. City, in April, 1889, at the age of 70; a sketch is in Bancroft's "Contemporary Biography;" for his litigation with Rodman M. Price, see Chapter ou John T. Doyle in "Bench and Bar." He was tried on charge of criminal libel of Rodman M. Price, and was acquitted, Nov. 17, 1880.

Dewing Company, The J.; publishers; and importers and manufacturers of pianos; Jas. Dewing, president; Madison S. Dewing, vice president; this firm has had this style since 1886; from that year back to 1883, it was in two parts, both styled J. Dewing & Co.; one, composed of James and Madison S. Dewing, carried on the business of publishers and booksellers; the other (James, Madison S. and Amasa J. Dewing) that of piano makers; except that Jas. Dewing had no partner in the publishing business in the years 1883-84-85.

This now reorganized house had its foundation in that of Dewing & Laws (Francis Dewing and Jeremiah Laws) importers of subscription books, established in 1864. This latter became Francis Dewing & Co., in 1867; Mr. James Dewing, the present president, became a partner in 1871.

Duane, Charles P.; was Chief Engineer of the Volunteer Fire Dep't, 1853-54. It was on account of Gov. Bigler's pardon of him for an assault on one Ball, that the grand jury appeared before County Judge Campbell, on Sept. 10, 1851, and demanded to be discharged. The Judge refused their request. The fatal shooting of Col. Wm. G. Ross, with whom Duane disputed about the ownership of a piece of land, occurred on May 23, 1866; D. was tried in the 12th District Court, and acquitted on Oct. 31, 1866. In the Assembly, in 1855, D. presented a portrait of Henry Clay to that body; that was the only California Assembly which ever had a Whig speaker (W. W. Stow). On Feb. 13, 1856, Silas Selleck, a Know Nothing Assemblyman from Placer, afterwards a well-known resident of S. F., moved to have this portrait of Clay removed, as being a caricature; the motion was lost. Duane died at S. F., May 13, 1887; he was a native of Tipperary, Ireland, aged 58. A graphic account by Duane with some amusing features, of the duel between David C. Broderick and J. Caleb Smith, at Oakland, in 1852, is in Ben. Truman's "Field of Honor." Broderick's pistol was borrowed from Duane, and had been presented to the latter by John A. McGlynn, in 1850.

Duels: Will Hicks Graham and Geo. Frank Lemon fought with pistols near the barracks at Benicia, Sept. 14, 1851; seven shots were exchanged; L. was badly hurt at the last fire.

Capt. J. L. Folsom and A. C. Russell, the latter a journalist of S. F., exchanged two shots, in 1851, without harm, and a settlement followed. Russell and Gov. John McDougal exchanged shots the same year, also without damage.

Gov. McDougal and E. C. Kemble, editor of the Alta, were about to face each other in 1851, but were arrested on the field.

F. R. Wright and H. D. Evans exchanged shots without harm, when the seconds arranged a peace, in 1851.

E. B. Lundy, a Canadian, and Geo. M. Dibble, formerly a midshipman in the U. S. N., met near the city, in 1851, with pistols. Dibble was killed.

David C. Broderick and J. Caleb Smith fought in 1852, at a spot which is now the foot of Broadway, Oakland. They used navy revolvers, at ten paces. S. escaped injury, but one of his shots struck the watch in B.'s pocket, and the fragments of the watch slightly cut B.'s stomach; this was S.'s second shot, and B. received it while he was engaged in freeing the cylinder of his pistol from the exploded cap which had caught in it; both parties then emptied all their barrels, after which the seconds established peace. So many people had gone to the duelling ground from S. F., in small boats, all through the previous night, that they could not all get back the same way without great delay, and many secured horses and got home by way of San José. Chas. P. Duane's account of this duel, and of the laughable part he played in connection with it, is to be found in Ben Truman's "Field of Honor."

John Nugent, lawyer and editor, and Alderman John Cotter fought with pistols at ten paces, in 1852, in Contra Costa County; N. was severely wounded in the left thigh, at the second fire.

John Nugent and Assistant Alderman Thos. Hayes fought with rifles at twenty paces, in 1853, and again N. was wounded at the second shot.

Alfred Crane and Edward Tobey fought with navy revolvers at ten paces near S. F., in 1853. Crane, who was the challenged party, was shot through the body, and died the next day.

B. F. Washington and C. A. Washburn fought with rifles at forty paces, in 1854; Washburn was severely wounded at the second fire. He was afterwards, under the first administration of President Lincoln, Minister to Paraguay. Washington, in 1854, was editor of the Times and Transcript; he became Collector of the Port, under President Buchanan, and afterwards edited the Examiner.

Geo. T. Hunt, English, and Numa Hubert, French, both prominent lawyers, fought with pistols at the old Pioneer race course, at 5:30 A. M. May 21, 1854. Hunt, the challenged party, fell at the third fire. He called Hubert to him, and said "I forgive you." He died in 24 hours. An account of this duel and its occasion, by O. T. S., is in the Post of March 4, 1882. And see "Hubert, Numa."

Achilles Kewen, brother of E. J. C. Kewen, and Col. Woodlief, ex-County Judge of San Joaquin, had a political dispute in the Blue Wing saloon, on Montgomery street near Clay, in Nov., 1854. K. acknowledged that he had been too hasty, but W. would not accept this, and insisted on a fight. They met ten miles back of Oakland, Nov. 8th, and at the first fire, which was with Mississippi yagers, at forty paces, W. was shot in the head and killed instantly.

Austin E. Smith, a brother of Judge Smith, who had fought with Broderick, and H. B. Truett met near the city, in Oct., 1855, with Colt's revolvers, ten paces. S. was hit in the leg.

Jas. P. Withered and Capt. Frank Shaffer met with double-barrelled shot guns, loaded with buck shot, near S. F., in 1857. The formidable arms did no damage.

A. H. Rapp, editor of the French paper, Le Phare, and M. Thiele, editor of the French paper, Spectateur, fought with short swords, Jan. 27, 1858; T. was woulded in the leg.

Balie Peyton and Gregory Yale, distinguished lawyers, while on the field near Oakland, and about to exchange shots, received a letter from Francis J. Lippitt, a brother attorney, who was connected with the trouble, which brought about an immediate settlement, June 18, 1858.

Wm. I. Ferguson, lawyer and orator of first rank, State Senator from Sacramento, and Geo. Pen. Johnston, Clerk of the U. S. Circuit Court, and associate editor of the National, had a convivial altercation in the Bank Exchange saloon, Aug. 19, 1858; a duel with pistols followed on Angel Island, Aug. 21st; F.'s thigh bone was broken at the fourth fire; he died at S. F., Sept. 14, 1858. For an account of the affair and Ferguson's interesting life, see "Representative Men."

Wm. I. Ferguson's last moments; his noble nature; a pathetic recital; see Sacramento "Union," Sept. 17, 1858, page 2.

David C. Broderick, U. S. Senator, and David S. Terry, Justice of the Supreme Court, fought with pistols, near Lake Merced, S. F., Sept. 13, 1859; B. fell at the first fire, and died Sept. 16th. For a graphic account by an eye witness, see "Bench and Bar."

Chas. W. Piercy, of San Bernardino, and Daniel Showalter of Mariposa, both members of the Assembly, fought in Marin Co. with rifles, and Piercy was killed, May 25, 1861.

Frank Turk and O. C. Hall, lawyers, exchanged shots, then "made up," June 1, 1862.

For correspondence looking to a duel, between Hon. Wm. W. Porter and Hon. H. G. Worthington—Wm. Governeur Morris and James E. Nuttman, representing W., and Jas. F. Quin and David S. Terry, representing P.—See local papers, June 23, 24, 1861.

A German and a Pole fought in the dark, with revolvers, at 12 paces, at 7 o'clock, P. M., Nov. 28, 1866; neither was hurt.

James R. Smedberg and F. W. Gardener fought at Sausalito with duelling pistols in Aug., 1869; S. was wounded in the hand at the second fire. His second was Col. Stuart M. Taylor; while Howard Crittenden attended Gardener. In this, one of the latest, if not the very latest duel in California, both parties displayed great nerve.

Paul Zacchi and one Ives met near the Ocean House, Jan. 19, 1875; Z. instead of aiming at his adversary, tried to kill himself. Both parties survived.

Major Ben C. Truman, in his "Field of Honor," issued in 1884, declares that there have been more fatal duels in California than in all of the Northern States; and that between the years of 1850 and 1860, more fatal encounters took place in this State than elsewhere in the Union in any ten years' period.

 $I_{\Pi}$  the foregoing record, duels occurring in the interior are not noticed except where one or both participants belonged to San Francisco.

Baker's eloquent protest against the "Code of Honor," was uttered in his oration at the burial of Broderick, Sept. 18, 1859. (This noble oration is in "Representative Men of the Pacific.")
